The bust of Matthew Arnold, destined for Westminster Abbey, will be from the chisel of Mr. Bruce Joy.

Mark Twain intends to have another go at olde-world England. His next book is to be called "A Yankee at King Arthur's Court," in which he will, in his own peculiar vein, satirize English society and royalty. He is not alone in this; for the novelist is now having most widely read in the United States is "American Coin," which draws a satirical picture of impious English peers in search of fortune, and of the daughters of American millionaires in search of titles.

The last hope of Sir Wilfrid has deserted him. The terrible discovery has been made that you can drink tea without leaves. Instead of drinking the tea you drink tea-water. It is proposed to agree to effect first, but indolent friends, to supply the want mentioned. It has likewise been proposed to add a large amount of leaves to the tea, so as to supply as much as possible. In large gardens, it is proposed to have a strip of turf, which could be utilized for the purpose, and in smaller gardens it will be considered a great boon. The pieces of ground should be long and narrow, resembling the shape of a bagatelle-board; a large curve, semi-circular in form, takes the tea, and the outside of the bagatelle-board. The holes will be made by care, made for the purpose, sunk into the ground, so as to cause sleepiness, disorderly impulses and delirium. Now there will need to be a United Kingdom Alliance for the prevention of tea-taking. The prospect is rather alarming. There is quite enough tea-drinking rakes already; and a tea-taking delirium would presumably be an even worse form of the disease, although it could hardly be called hydroponic.

"On the way to the station," says one account of the Shah of Manchester, "a boy in the street, perceivingly ran by the Shah's carriage, calling His Majesty's attention to his portrait on an illustrated pamphlet, entitled 'The Life of the Shah,' which has been widely circulated at the time of the Shah's attention was drawn, and through Prince George, who bought a copy from the boy, giving him half a crown." That boy should rise in the world. Not every one of his class would have the sublime chisel to budge the King of Kings into buying a penny pamphlet.

It must not be supposed that the War Office is ill in the master of the new rule. It is fortunate in having the advice of Mr. John Riccy, who as head of the Enfield Arms Factory, has justly justified his appointment. It is hoped to make the name of the magazine ripe next year. The man who has been so long harried on, but there is something to be said in favor of the police who has submitted the report to an extended course of practical experiments, both at home and abroad. The reports from India are very satisfactory. Sir Frederick Roberts is impressed with the remarkable character of the weapon. And it must be allowed that he is a competent authority, and one who has no reason to express any but an unprejudiced verdict.

Among eminent lawyers who have taken pleasure in the Turf may be mentioned Ernest Martin. When travelling as judge on the Western Circuit he was invited to dine with the Warden of Winchester College. After bidding turned to a friend and said, "The Judge is a man of great common-sense and shrewdness; but, to be frank, he is not a good man." But the good man had given up the hobby of William of Wykeham." But the good man had a ground of complaint against the Warden, for as he drove away in his carriage he complained to his master, "Well, for a learned man the Warden is the most ignorant man I ever met, for he did not know that John Day had training-stables at Dunsden!"

Railway passengers have been known to remark that two only are to remedy traffic troubles is a like and terrible disaster. Something of a like sort has occurred in America, which will probably make for abolishing the mail, which was expected, the 30 per cent duty levied on all works of art entering that country. One of the most ardent Protectionists has just tangible proof of how this law operates, and in this way. He bought a picture in Paris, for which on importation to New York he paid $30 per cent. duty. It was then found necessary to send the picture back to Paris for one or two minor alterations. On its return the authorities demanded another 30 per cent. duty. The Protectionist demurred, but he had to pay.

A well-known and amusing story is told of Sheridan, who was no sportsman. Having gone out on a shooting excursion, everything went before him and his gun, despite his efforts to remember to load it for his bag. On his return home with an empty bag, he was met by an apparent farmer, looking over a gate of ducks in a pool. "What will you take?" said Sheridan, "for a shot at these ducks?" The man looked at him with astonishment. "Will half-a-crown do?" The man nodded, and Sheridan gave him the gun, taking his shot at the ducks. About half-a-dozen fell dead. As he was about to bring them to the man, "I am on the whole, I have got a good bargain of you," "Why?" said the man. "They're none of mine!"

A lady expert writes to us:—The toroador Lagartija, who brought the bull-fight in Paris the other day to such an unexpected conclusion by slaying the bull in the Spanish fashion, one of the fatal strokes, would be accounted but a very sorry performance in our country. I was once present at a bull-fight in Spain where the matador failed to kill the bull on the first sword-thrust; and the spectators rose in execration, hissed the man out of the arena, and swarming over the barriers—hundreds, drove the poor brute forth, weak and dead, raged as he was from loss of blood, and had him skinned by a butcher, a person in a Spanish audience, that the fact of his having had some what unskillful few minutes, was probably by seeing his brother gored almost to death, the same bull, was not considered sufficient excuse for the failure of the coups de grâce.

When the French Government in 1837 suppressed the bookmakers in favour of the purser and sweepstakes system, working under Government control, it was found that 2 per cent of all money collected on the suburban racetraces should be handed over to charitable objects, to be specified later by the authorites. Since then bookmakers have been allowed to return to the racetraces, while the pari mutuel has increased enormously in public favor. The Minister of the Interior has decided that two-thirds of the proceeds of the tax collected at Longchamps, Auteuil, and Vincennes in 1837 and 1838 are to be handed over to the Municipal Outdoor Relief Fund. This gift, amounting to $2,000,000 for 20 months, represents only 10 per cent of the sum which has changed hands during the same period on three racetraces alone, not including bookmakers' transactions nor private bets.

The Persian Minister at Washington, His Excellency Hajji Hassan Ghooch Khan, has left the States in great haste. To a New York newspaper he said, "I am compelled to leave the country, as I am persecuted by the silly news papers of this country. You have heard of the scarcely nation on the globe that is not represented; but I could not walk on the streets of Washington without being greeted with laughter by the populace. Why was this? Simply because I dared come out in my official uniform. The newspaper take up the same silly habit. The correspondents describe my ears my nose, and my skin, as if I were a great people, and you have made great progress in science and art. I, indeed, like the country, I am ashamed of your wisdom; but why have you not better writers? Why are your newspapers more gossipy machines to do the general tailing business? This is not wise. It is foolish. Any child could write as some of them write."

The King of Sweden, like all other monarchs, has enough to do to care for his health, as well as his chest; he has to put them all on the same time; and, as a matter of fact, His Majesty appears in public with but one medal on his breast, and what do you think that one is? It is a medal conferred on him by a French society for having saved life at Paris as long ago as 1864. The King of Sweden, however, had not yet ascertained the stories, he was staying at the Duke of Gothland, and was taking his constitutional excursion with a single aide-de-camp, when he suddenly saw a pair of runaway horses approaching him at a mad gallop. As the course these horses were taking would have led them to the place where nearly all the visitors in Paris were, for the King had not probably been constituted of life, had he not the Crown Prince of Sweden, at great personal risk, run himself on the maddest steeds as the case may be, and by the exercise of his exceptional strength, stopped them in their wild career.

Though bookmakers still popular, and probably will remain so for a long time, there are some other game which may occupy those who do not care for as much exertion as lawn-tennis requires. The game of lawn-bagatelle, which has been invented by a Derbyshire lady, will, says a correspondent of the Queen, be found to supply the want mentioned. It has likewise the charm of novelty, whilst another advantage possessed by the game is that it requires as much space as lawn-tennis. In large gardens it is often a strip of turf, which could be utilized for the purpose, and in smaller gardens it will be considered a great boon. The pieces of ground should be long and narrow, resembling the shape of a bagatelle-board; a large curve, semi-circular in form, takes the tea, and the outside of the bagatelle-board.

The holes will be made by care, made for the purpose, sunk into the ground, so as to cause sleepiness, disorderly impulses and delirium. Now there will need to be a United Kingdom Alliance for the prevention of tea-taking. The prospect is rather alarming. There is quite enough tea-drinking rakes already; and a tea-taking delirium would presumably be an even worse form of the disease, although it could hardly be called hydroponic.
